Nashville Crash 'Broke' Hundreds of Banks in South

JURY PICKS LEADER

DeWitt Carter's Story Fixed Blame on President of Caldwell & Co.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—(AP)—Rogers Caldwell, former head of the huge investment banking house of the same name and a power in Tennessee's finances and politics, was convicted by a criminal court jury Monday on a charge of fraudulent breach of trust. He was sentenced to not more than three years in prison.

The indictment alleged that Caldwell substituted securities for less value for other collateral pledged to secure deposits of Hardeman county, the proceeds of the sale of a county road bond issue.

Bonds Removed

Evidence introduced at the trial showed that the terms of the trust agreement between Hardeman county and the Bank of Tennessee, the Caldwell institution, required the county to deposit $50,000 in bonds or collateral of equal value. It was not disputed by the defense that the original collateral was replaced with industrial bonds, which subsequently depreciated in value, but the defense maintained that Caldwell did not order the substitution, and was not in fact aware that it had been made.

DeWitt Carter, a vice-president of Caldwell & Co., and the man whom Caldwell sent into Arkansas to complete negotiations with A. B. Banks & Co. in 1928, was a witness for the state, explaining that when Caldwell & Co. were hard-pressed, and the high-grade municipal bonds had been replaced with low-grade industrials, he called attention of Caldwell to the fact that the trust agreement with Hardeman county had been violated.

Caldwell Was Told

Caldwell & Co. were unable to procure additional municipal bonds to cover the trust agreement, Carter testified, and he declared that when Caldwell learned of this condition he said "the responsibility for this remains on my head."

Caldwell denied Carter's story, when testifying in his own defense, Caldwell attorneys upbraided Carter with having turned on the man "who furnished his bread and butter," to which Carter retorted that he had "sunk everything with Rogers Caldwell" and had only produced his banking records in order to protect himself "from the very kind of prosecution that is being shifted on me now."

Caldwell & Co., with a valuation of $45,000,000 two years ago, was rated as the greatest investment house in the South. Its slogan, "We bank on the South," was nationally known.

His crash caused the collapse of the $41,000,000 Banco-Kentucky at Louisville, Ky., the Bank of Tennessee, the Houston-Union Bank and numerous others in Tennessee, and A. B. Banks & Co. in Little Rock, Ark., operating 48 banking units and three insurance companies.

Mr. Banks was tried in Little Rock last week for accepting a deposit in an insolvent bank, and convicted Saturday, receiving a sentence of one year in the penitentiary.

Fall to Be Asked To Begin Sentence

Government's Attorneys Will Petition Washington Court Tuesday

Counsel will appear before Justice Bailey of the District of Columbia supreme court Tuesday morning to ask that Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, be brought here at once to begin his jail sentence. Fall was convicted of accepting a bribe for the leasing of naval oil reserves by Edward L. Doheny, American oil magnate.

Serving of sentence has been delayed by claims that Fall was in serious illness, which, however, has continued through the winter and spring.

East Arkansas Is Faced With Vast Foreclosure Suit

One and Half Million Acres Attacked By Wynne Attorney

HE WANTS HIS FEE

Half Dozen Arkansas Counties May Be Forced to Defend Title

MEMPHIS.—(AP)—The Evening Appeal says Monday that J. C. Brookfield, a Wynne attorney, has advertised 1,500,000 acres of Arkansas farmlands and 20,000 city lots for public sale in an effort to collect a $2266 judgment against the old Harahan Viaduct Improvement District.

The Harahan bridge district is now a part of the St. Francis Levee District.

The land in question lies in Crittenden, Mississippi, Cross, Poinsett, Craighead, Lee, St. Francis and Phillips counties.

It will be on the auction block unless the taxpayers get an order from Chancellor Futrell at Paragould stopping the sale.

The chancellor has issued orders for the sale but told officers to withhold action while he continues his study of the case, the Evening Appeal says.

Collision Fatal to Young Missourian

jured as Auto Hits Truck, Mays Wilson of Hayti, Indies at Blytheville

BLYTHEVILLE.—Mays Wilson, 23, of near Hayti, Mo., died at a hospital here late Sunday from injuries received in an automobile accident one mile north of Hayti.

Wilson was in a dying condition when brought here with his chest crushed. He and others were riding on the back of a truck, on route to a dance at White City on Highway No. 61, when a car driven by a Chicago negro struck the rear end of the truck, knocking Wilson to the pavement and crushing him.

Officers at Hayti were unable to give the negro's name but said he is held at Caruthersville, where he probably will be charged with manslaughter.

Wilson lived at Dry Bayou, five miles north of Hayti. He is survived by his wife, who was in the truck when the accident occurred. Funeral services will be held at Hayti.

Babcock, Inventor Butter Test, Dies

Discovered Process in 1890 and Gave Patent Right Free

MADISON, Wis.—(AP)—Dr. Stephen Moulton Babcock, whose test for determining butter-fat content of milk is the base around which the modern dairy industry is built, was found dead in his home last Thursday. He was nearing his 88th birthday.

Dr. W. T. Lindsay, the scientist's physician, said the heat wave had aggravated a heart attack.

In 1890, Dr. Babcock discovered how to put acid in milk and swirl it about in tubes on a circular rack so that centrifugal force and chemical action separated the contents. This experiment he gave to dairymen and to the world, with the announcement: "The test is not patented."

It tells dairymen which of their cows is not producing and dairy men regard it as the basis for the development of high-producing herds.

Last fall he received the Capper award of $5,000 and a gold medal for the most distinguished service to agriculture.

Dierks Seeks to Get County Seat

Petition Bearing 1,600 Names Presented to County Judge

DIERKS.—A petition for the removal of the county seat from Nashville to Dierks, bearing approximately 1,600 names of Howard county taxpayers, has been filed at the county clerk's office and will be presented to Judge J. F. Chesshire when court convenes at Nashville Monday morning.

Citizens of Dierks have offered to erect a courthouse here without cost to taxpayers if the petition is granted. A trial in bond and charges already have been paid for a building already abandoned by administration forces.

They're Heroes Now

They were disheveled and red-eyed with weariness; their faces drawn, their clothing splattered with the mud of Germany, Siberia and Canada. But Wiley Post, left, and Harold Gatty, right, were heroes of the world they had encircled when this picture was taken at Roosevelt Field, Long Island, from which they had hopped off 8 days and 16 hours previously. A surging crowd of some 10,000 persons cheered the two airmen, who are shown in front of their plane, the Winnie Mae, in a hangar at Roosevelt Field.

Hoover Entertains Round World Fliers

Aviators Are Guests at Luncheon Served at White House

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Two days of rest and relaxation in the quiet of Long Island sound have filled the world fliers, Wiley Post and Harold Gatty for a White House luncheon.

They were headed back for New York early Sunday night on the yacht Saelmo, whose owner, William H. Todd, ship builder, has been their host since Friday.

For more than 48 hours the two men have been able to sleep, to loll in deck chairs, to fish and to golf. There have been no cheering crowds following them wherever they went. There have been no photographers and reporters trailing them for interviews and pictures.

The only scheduled event on their program Sunday was a stop at Hampton Bays, Long Island, where the entire party, including the fliers' wives and F. C. Hall, backer of the flight, were guests for luncheon at the home of former Governor Alfred E. Smith.

Sunday night the ship was put in shape for its next hop, a trip to Washington Monday morning, where the fliers and their backers will be guests of President Hoover. They will return to Barren island late Monday and prepare for the triumphal flight into Oklahoma.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—(AP)—As the 6th Tennessee general assembly prepared for a sine die adjournment Thursday, all hope of averting an extraordinary session was abandoned by administration forces.

Chicagoan Held As Track Bomber

Feud With Elevated Railway Company Leads to His Arrest

CHICAGO.—(P)—John Graff, 43, wealthy apartment house operator, who police said carried on a feud with the Chicago Rapid Transit Company because the roar of its elevated trains disturbed his tenants, was arrested Sunday in connection with a plot to bomb the company's Howard street terminal. He denied the charge.

One bomb exploded in the terminal yards today, tearing up tracks, shattering car windows and endangering lives of citizens living nearby. Two other bombs, with fuses sputtering, were discovered nearby and extinguished.

The bombs were of such size that an iron cap from the one exploded tore its way through a house located a block away, narrowly missing four sleeping children. The terminal yards were practically deserted at the time.

Police, acting on information supplied by company officials, reported they found in Graff's apartment a portion of a box in which the unexploded bombs were placed. He was held on a technical charge.

Graff, whose 38-apartment building is located adjacent to the terminal, has instituted many complaints against the company, police said, charging that the screeching of car wheels and the rattling of switches caused his tenants to leave.

 A Thought
 Why, ye knights of the pen! May honour be your shield, and truth tip your lances! Be gentle to all gentle people. Be modest to women. Be tender to children. And as for the poor tramp, out sword, and have at him!—William Makepeace Thackeray.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 THE mother in Hammond, Ind., who drove her 5-year-old boy away from home because he was a bother around the house and kept her from living the care-free sort of life she desired for, is certainly too much of an exception to the general rule of parents to be worth much comment.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Any mother who could do a thing like that must be so lacking in the fundamental human traits of ordinary decency and compassion that she is no more worth talking about than any other uninspiring freak of nature.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Nevertheless, the whole miserable affair deserves a second glance, for a great many parents who would never dream of doing as this woman did have, nevertheless, more than a trace of the feeling that motivated her.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 That is the feeling that finds expression in laments about the ingratitude of children, the "sacrifices" that parents have to make for their young, and the hard lot that befalls so many adults whose children do not realize how much they owe them.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Plenty of parents nurse that emotion pretty constantly. Nearly all of us, probably, entertain it at one time or another. This Indiana affair, which simply carries that feeling to its logical conclusion, ought to show us how absurd it is.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 The plain fact of the matter is that the average child owes his parents very little. When he is grown, of course, he will do everything in his power to protect his parents and to care for them in their old age, and it is right that he should; but that is not a matter of balancing the books, and repaying a stupendous debt.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Think it over a little. Children do not come into the world of their own volition. Their parents bring them into it. Having done so, the least the parents can do is give them a decent home, loving sympathy and the wisest kind of training, which can possibly provide. That is the parents' duty, and it is a duty that takes precedence over everything else on earth.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Naturally, since few of us are millionaires, we have to make sacrifices to do these things. But have we, after all, any right to call them "sacrifices"? Have we any right to feel that we are noble and long-suffering because of them?

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 For many centuries the world has listened to gray-beards yapping about the duty of children toward their parents. If there had been more talk about the duty of parents toward their children it would be, by a good many miles, a better world today.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Our Isolation Policy
 THOSE who like to think that the Atlantic ocean still isolates America from Europe as effectively as it did in the days of sailing vessels must be finding it hard to understand the high significance of President Hoover's proposal for a year's moratorium on war debts and reparations.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 As a matter of fact, this event—which probably will be what 1931 is remembered for in the history books of the next generation—ought to dispel the last shreds of belief in our splendid isolation. The plain truth of the matter is that the future of Europe rests largely on what America does. When an American president, by a simple statement to the press, can check the probability of revolution in Germany and inspire all of Europe with a new hope, it is evident that American isolation is ended.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Just where has this isolation of ours gone, anyway? Most historians say that it really ended with the war with Spain. By seizing the Philippines and setting Cuba free, the United States announced itself as a world power. Less than two decades later the country found itself engaged in a European war, sending troops 3000 miles overseas, maintaining a fleet in the North Sea, sending smaller squadrons to the Mediterranean and dispatching an army to Siberia. The transatlantic had come rapidly.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Yet nobody would it. It came inevitably. The industrial revolution, which made every nation at least partly dependent on every other, was largely responsible. So, too, were the new methods of travel and communication, which divided old distances by ten and made messages move with the speed of thought. During the last half century the world became a hundred times more complex than it had been before; and it also shrank to a fraction of its former size. The policy of isolation, as a result, simply ceased to have any meaning—although we have not yet entirely realized it.

The Star's Platform
 The Duty of Parents
 Today Americans are reading again about German reparations, war debts, the international political currents of distant nations; and while we may find it unpleasant to be obliged to understand these things, we cannot escape the job. We have got to make ourselves realize that we are not isolated any longer; that the entire world is looking to us for leadership; and that our own welfare and the welfare of Europe are inextricably inter-related.

Washington Letter

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
 N.E.A. Service Writer

WASHINGTON—The prime reason behind the Hoover proposal to suspend international debt payments for a year seems to have been that everyone was becoming badly scared.

Scared enough, at least, to throw off any isolationist inhibitions and forget for awhile our traditional official theory that war debts had no connection whatever with reparations. And if you were president and were scared nobody could cry shame on you, because you would be in company with the world's most important statesmen, bankers and industrialists.

Spectre of Communism
 The last few weeks got such people thinking - about what might happen if Germany collapsed. How much of the rest of Europe would be carried down in such a financial and economic crash. The bogies of war and Communism both raised their heads. Enormous American foreign investments and a still very important volume of American trade were involved. A domestic depression of long standing, tied in closely with the world-wide slump, threatened to become far worse and last much longer. Even the next presidential election in this country seemed likely to hang on what happened to Germany.

The American, British and German governments worked the suspension scheme out by themselves, but it doesn't quite appear that this marks the beginning of a millennium in which statesmen will unite to solve world problems. The arrangement does, however, present the spectacle of a bucket brigade hastily organized to quench an arsenal fire.

Germany's Position
 Agreement is nearly unanimous that Germany had found herself in a position where she could no longer pay her reparations and with internal conditions, economic and political, rapidly becoming more threatening. Our own war debtors would not continue their debt payments when deprived of the reparations receipts. At best the effects would have approached the disastrous if all hands had demanded their own moratorium and President Hoover and Secretary Mellon came to accept the view that the safest method would be a proposal by this country. The speed of the final negotiations, the hasty conferences with members of Congress and the special Saturday night press conference at which the Hoover announcement was given to the world indicate the serious urgency with which the administration viewed the problem.

Possibilities of political as well as financial upheavals gave all the nations involved a great deal of concern. Sir Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, is said to have told the directors of the International Bank of Settlements recently that the whole capitalist system was likely to collapse within six months. Norman's conversations with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in England are supposed to have been the final factor in the negotiations and developments which so quickly afterward produced the Hoover plan.

Churches Are Declared Prohibition Backbones

LAKE JONALUSKA, N. C.—(P)—The board of temperance and social service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Thursday looked to the churches of the nation as the "backbone of any successful prohibition movement."

The board voted to recognize the Anti-Saloon league, the W. C. T. U. and the World League Against Alcohol as the accredited agencies of the Christian churches for leading the prohibition forces in this country.

The board heard Dr. A. C. Miller, Methodist editor of Little Rock, Ark., assail "the divorce situation in the United States" as "a national disgrace and a stench in the nostrils of civilization."

Big Shortage in Wheat Production Predicted

KANSAS CITY.—(P)—A shortage of 350 million bushels of wheat in world wide production during the coming years was forecast here by A. M. Hyde, secretary of agriculture who declared there is a place for virtually all the wheat on hand if the world can afford to buy it.

The secretary's forecast, he said, took into consideration Russia's production, Canada, where the crop estimate for this year is only 225 million bushels, Argentina, with an acreage reduction of 30 per cent in favor of flax, and Australia with a 40 per cent reduction in acreage.

Versatile, Large Scale Agriculturalist Proposed South's Farm Board Member

JACKSONVILLE, Fla.—(AP)—An expert Jack of many trades is Dr. Burdette G. Lewis, proposed by many as a representative of the South on the federal farm board.

Forty-nine years old and born at Jamestown, Pa., Dr. Lewis is descended from colonial stock. He is a University of Nebraska graduate. By his work with leaders in agriculture, banking, transportation and industry in every state of the "old South," he is regarded as being well fitted to wrestle with the problems of diversification, co-operative marketing and credit.

Active in New York
Reared upon a large dairy farm in Pennsylvania, Dr. Lewis helped reorganize the milk supply system of New York City. He established three large farm colonies for that city and helped reorganize four others where patients were taught to produce food for themselves.

Two trips to Europe in 1927 and 1928 to study agricultural conditions in Denmark, France, Germany and England resulted in an invitation from Japanese sources to go to Korea to establish a unified agricultural system. In Wisconsin, Dr. Lewis was an examiner in adjusting tax rates be-

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Uncle Sam set out Thursday to pull himself out of his worst financial hole since the war.

A check of his books July 1 showed he lacked just about a billion dollars of coming out even for the past 12-month. A statement by Acting Secretary Mills of the treasury blamed the $903,000,000 deficit largely upon increased expenditures for agricultural aid and relief, additional benefits to war veterans, accelerated governmental construction activities and up on a severe decline in taxes, particularly income. Customs and internal revenue receipts, important sources of government funds, also fell off.

As Stribling Hit the Floor in Last Round

Knocked out by terrific body punches and battered down by the champion's swinging right hand, W. L. (Young) Stribling is shown here sprawled on the floor after he had been knocked out in the 15th round of the heavyweight battle with Max Schmeling in Cleveland's new stadium. Referee is seen standing just before he awarded the fight to Schmeling on a technical knockout. The champion is shown, with his back turned, walking away.

German Real Champ as He Kayoes Strib

Schmeling Given Technical Knockout in 15th—Georgian Game to End

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The world's heavyweight boxing championship definitely passed from America for the first time in half a century here last Friday night when Max Schmeling, German strong man, made good his claim to the title by scoring a technical knockout over Willie Stribling, pride of Georgia, in the last round of their 15-round fight.

The man who looks like Jack Dempsey was good enough to pulverize probably the best scientific boxer in the United States, and thus proved that he was entitled to the championship which a referee awarded him on a fourth by Jack Sharkey a year ago.

Schmeling entered the ring barely at even odds, with a majority of the sports writers believing Stribling would "take" him.

But the Georgia boy was either overtrained, or else his 10-year career in the ring square had burned him out at 26. Stribling, it is estimated, has appeared 300 times in boxing tests.

A master of defense, and sharp on the attack when he wants to be, Stribling started his campaign against the German in flashy style. For six rounds he threw everything he had at Schmeling, but the German kept boring in for more. In the seventh, the tide of battle turned against the American, and in the tenth round Stribling was virtually out on his feet.

From the tenth on it was a rout, and only Stribling's superb defense and countless courage kept him going. In the fifteenth, Schmeling knocked the American down for the count of nine. Stribling got up, but was gone on his feet. With 14 seconds to go to the end of the fight, Referee Blake, heeding both the appeal of Schmeling and the crowd, stopped the battle and gave the German the decision on a technical knockout. "Strib" had been in bad shape for six rounds, and the referee's decision was unanimously approved.

The bout decided two things. Schmeling is a purveyor of some repute, and his boxing is marvelously improved since that day when a low swing by Jack Sharkey gave the German the championship. The bout also proved that Willie Stribling had more courage than strength. Unlike his style in previous bouts, he fought an open fight up to the time he was hurt in the seventh, and his clinching was not noticeable until the 10th, when he was knocked out on his feet and mauling became a matter of self-preservation.

Stribling, sapped by his long career as a boxer, and too strenuous six-weeks training period, weakened in the middle of the fight. Schmeling, on the other hand, was practically as fresh at the end of the bout as when he started.

American boxing experts, on the other hand, are gloomy over the prospects of the champion ship coming back to the United States very soon. They concede Schmeling is a rough-and-ready battler who has developed boxing skill, and that he had to rule the heavyweight roost for some time to come. His next hurdle may be Primo Carnera, the Italian giant, but no American candidate appears in the near future. Schmeling may fight Carnera in September.

Schmeling made an excellent impression with the fans at Cleveland. Both he and Stribling fought a clean bout, in which the better man won. Attendance was 31,000—disappointing to the promoters—with a total gate of $350,000. The government got $75,000 in taxes, Schmeling drew 40 per cent of the balance of $108,000, while Stribling got 12 1/2 per cent or $33.00. The Madison Square Garden corporation, which promoted the bout in Cleveland's new $3,000,000 municipal stadium, announced that it lost on the fight, but considered it would come out in the long run, since Schmeling had established himself as a real champion with the fans, and the Madison Square Garden company has him under contract for future fights.

Freckles and His Friends By Blosser

Heart of Liane by MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY
LIANE BARRETT, 15, is a beautiful girl, a daughter of a wealthy family, who has been brought up in a very sheltered life. She is a very popular girl, and is very fond of her mother, who is a very beautiful woman. She is a very popular girl, and is very fond of her mother, who is a very beautiful woman. She is a very popular girl, and is very fond of her mother, who is a very beautiful woman.

CHAPTER X
"MOTHER, how about asking Mr. Walters if I'm to have that job as a dress model at Hedges?" Liane asked.
"It was the last week of August, and Liane was in a very good mood. She was a very popular girl, and was very fond of her mother, who was a very beautiful woman. She was a very popular girl, and was very fond of her mother, who was a very beautiful woman. She was a very popular girl, and was very fond of her mother, who was a very beautiful woman."

"Cass stamped her foot in its frayed satin mule. 'Give it to me this minute. Do you hear?'"
Cass determined to take the plunge.
"Mrs. Cleopatra wants you to stay with her this winter," she said tremulously and was surprised at the response the young girl gave. She flushed and smiled. Her soft eyes were lighted charmingly.
"You like the prospect?" Cass asked in amazement. She thought the old lady something of a Gorgon herself.
"It—it might be fun," Liane faltered. "Oh Mums, not that I shouldn't mind being away from you! Of course I'd hate that. But you said yourself that you'd have to be going on the road and I can't trail along. This—honestly now—doesn't it look like a gift from the gods?"
Cass had to admit it did. With a heavy heart she said, "It's settled then? You want me to tell her you'll come?"
"Well, mother," Liane looked grave, "it seems a sensible thing to do. I could at least earn my living that way. It'll be better than the ribbon counter."
Then with a mercurial change the girl rushed across the room, enfolded the older woman in her arms and cried, in a muffled voice, "Do let me come along with you. I'll be a great help to you. I'll be a great help to you. I'll be a great help to you."

back of the small cardboard.
"Luisa Emerson, May, 1909."
"Why, she looks astonishingly like you, Mother," marveled Liane, turning it over and regarding the smiling features. The pose of the pictured girl was consciously dramatic. She wore a swirling pompadour, a rose in the curve of her neck.
"She's lovely," said Liane. "But Mother, you never told me you had a sister."

CASS, ominously silent, received the picture from her hands. "Now that you're quite through examining my belongings," she said in a voice furiously low. All this was so unlike her even tempered self that Liane glanced at her, amazed. "I'm sorry," she said. "I didn't mean to tease."

Cass went on, "I never have spoken of Luisa because her death was such a shock to me. To all of us. It's all too painful."
Liane said pitifully, "Don't tell me about it, Mother. I'm sorry, honestly I am. I didn't mean to snoop."
"No, no. There's no reason you shouldn't know," Cass continued. "She was beautiful and talented. She died of brain fever when she was 21."

"Oh, mother, I am sorry," mourned Liane. Cass' eyes were dimmed. "I didn't get over it for months—years, really. I never want to talk about it."
"Is that why you never go back home?"
"Partly. Besides, there's no one back there I want to see." Cass was putting the picture away now. She was self-possessed once more.

"That was Mrs. Cleopatra calling," she said. "She will send the car for you tomorrow morning. It's all settled and she's delighted you are coming."
"Whatever made you decide so suddenly?" Liane asked.
Cass was teasing papers and clippings from the trunk. She looked around as if in surprise. "Didn't you want me to say you'd come?"
Liane drew her brows together thoughtfully.

"I don't know how I'll fit in in that grand house."
Cass said, "Don't be silly. You've been properly brought up. You know which fork to use."
"I didn't mean that. Perhaps I'll feel like a pensioner." Rebellion swept over her soul. Why need they be so poor, to accept such favors at the hands of strangers?
"I'd rather take bits, walk-ons, anything, and stay with you," Liane grumbled. "I don't want to be anybody's man Friday."
Cass came over and shook her gently by the shoulder.

"You're a naughty girl to talk like that. This is a business arrangement, not charity. You know trouping always ruins your digestion and you catch such terrible colds. I won't have to worry about you this way."
She watched Liane anxiously. "I hate being poor," flamed the girl bitterly. "I hate all of it, cast-off clothes and patronage and the rest. What wouldn't I do to be independent!" It was pure challenge then a question.
Cass paused in the act of sorting shoes. She echoed Liane's words with a sigh. "What wouldn't I do to be independent? Anything short of murder." She sat down. She looked weary and old. The girl's heart smote her. "It's a beast," she cried, contritely. "Of course I'll go. That'll be one worry off your mind, anyhow."

Liane arose with exaggerated dignity and handed her the book. As she relinquished it a photograph fell to the floor. "You can at least let me see what you looked like as Juliet," grumbled the girl, stooping to retrieve it. She gazed curiously at the inscription on the

Raid in Ouachita Nets Large Quantity of Beer

CAMDEN, Ark.—Several hundred bottles of beer were destroyed in a raid in the oil fields south of Camden by Sheriff Arthur Ellis, Deputy Sheriff B. M. Milner and Deputy Prosecutor T. M. Clifford. Three federal prohibition agents accompanied the county officers on the raid.
Two arrests were made and gaming equipment at the Monterey club, formerly the old Manhattan club, was destroyed.
Phil Modley was arrested and charged with manufacturing and possessing intoxicating liquor for sale. The beer was found at a place alleged to have been operated by Modley. Over 1600 bottles of beer were found and also a barrel of beer unbottled. This was destroyed, officers said.
Herbert Holder was arrested at the Monterey club, charged with operating and possessing gaming devices.

LITTLE ROCK, (P)—Federal prohibition forces destroyed 414 moonshine stills, with a capacity of 70,659 gallons of whiskey in Arkansas during the fiscal year ending June 30, Deputy Prohibition Administrator Hiram Sutherland said Wednesday in compiling his annual report.
There were 884 arrests and 698 convictions, with only eight acquittals by jury. Mr. Sutherland commented favorably upon work of his officers, and expressed appreciation for cooperation his department has received from other law enforcement organizations.

Senators Take Advantage of Error By George Earnshaw

After a disastrous road trip in the West the Washington Senators came home Sunday to beat George Earnshaw and the Athletics, 4 to 2, and climb back within 4 1/2 games of first place in the American pennant race.
Earnshaw, covering first base on a fielding play, let a throw get away from him, contributing to his defeat, although there were three other errors by his teammates. Big George held Washington to six hits, while the A's touched Marberry for eight.
The St. Louis Browns broke even with Chicago, winning the first of a double-header 3-1, and losing the nightcap 6-5. The Yankees outtumbled Boston, losing to the Red Sox in 11 innings, 6-3. Wesley Ferrell lost a tough one when Cleveland dropped a 5-4 decision to Detroit. But Sorrell, the Detroit pitcher, held the Indians to six hits.
In the National League, Pat Malone, the Chicago Cubs' star, pitched a perfect game against the St. Louis Cards and then paved the way for the winning run in the tenth inning, the Cubs beating the Cards 2 to 1. It was a been-pitting battle, Derrieger, for St. Louis, and Malone both holding the batsmen to seven hits.
Fred Frankhouse, Boston Braves' pitcher, ran his winning streak to five straight by defeating the Phillies 4 to 2. Old Jack Quinn celebrated his 46th birthday by pitching the Brooklyn Dodgers to a 4-3 victory over the Giants. Pittsburgh defeated Cincinnati 6 to 4.
